

Orwell was right.... only he was off a few years. Incidentally, Hillary Clinton's favorite books were "1984" and "Brave New World", where the government controlled all facets of society through technology. There is a microchip now in the hands of the government that has the potential of becoming the "mark of the beast" where you cannot "buy or sell" without it. Carl Sanders was a top electronics engineer and inventor for the U.S. government, who worked with the FBI, CIA, IRS and other government agencies designing spy technologies and surveillance equipment. He holds several patents and has been presented with the President's and Governor's Awards for Merit and Design Excellence. He was asked to explore the possibility of using implantable micro-technology to help restore the function of useless limbs resulting from nerve damage. Towards the early 1970's the government took an interest and began funding the project. The government was not concerned with the humanitarian aspects of the technology but rather the possibility of using the microchip as an identification device. Further research was done and the end result was the BT952000.

"Conceivably," he said, "a number could be assigned at birth and go with a person throughout life." He said a microchip could most likely be implanted on the back of the right or left hand for convenience, "so that it would be easy to scan."

He went on to explain, "It could be used as a universal identification card that would replace credit cards, passports, that sort of thing... It could be programmed to replace a medical alert bracelet. For example, at the scene of an accident, a medic could scan the person to find out his or her recent medical history, allergies or a relative to get in touch with. This would be especially valuable if the person was unconscious. The microchip could also replace the need for house and car keys."

Jack Dunlap, a private investigator in Tucson, Arizona, has come up with a concept for a lost child locator system he calls "KIDSCAN". It incorporated an implanted biochip that transmits a signal that bounces off a satellite to a computer screen map at police headquarters. A parent with a missing child could call the police, give the KIDSCAN Social Security number and have the child traced.

Willard believes today's microchip will be replaced in the next decade by a biochip made out of living protein: "It will be infinitely smaller and have the capacity to carry much more information." He added that it would have the potential limited amount of information into the mind - without having ever cracked open a book."

Christians are familiar with scripture that warns of a time when many will swear allegiance to and worship the Antichrist in exchange for the

for "a range of functions that will boggle our minds. But it will carry with it the danger of abuse, particularly the loss of personal privacy."

According to Willard, a human microchip ID system "would work best with a highly centralized computer system where one identification number would gain access to medical and academic records, home security - all kinds of things." Willard says that research is under way to develop a living biochip. "This biochip - made from living protein - "could be surgically implanted in the brain, making it possible to program or upload an un-

"mark of the beast". It is only with this mark that people will be able to buy or sell. One cannot speculate that the smart card or Implantable Biochip will be the mark of the beast, but they certainly are precursors.
